If students need practice in speaking, some of the questionnaire could be used for that purpose. Alternatively, this could be done as a class survey.

If students need further practice in vocabulary of either personal characteristics or aspects of family life, you could do a ranking exercise. First, elicit words from these exercises on, for example, personal characteristics (supportive, optimist, pessimist, sensitive), then brainstorm other descriptions of personal characteristics. Students should individually rank the most important five, and then decide jointly on the most important five in pairs or small groups.
